A HISTORY OF CELEBRATION

From the moment it first opened its doors on New Year’s Eve 1930, The Surf Club has been a place to share celebrations with family and friends, framed by an elegant backdrop of the beach and sea.

When tire tycoon Harvey Firestone first had the idea of a new type of social club, on board his yacht the Marybelle, he could never have imagined how enduring the appeal would be of what he would soon create.

Commanding a 9-acre stretch of oceanfront, the Mediterranean Revival building and beachside cabanas that made up The Surf Club were designed by Russell T. Pancoast. They formed elegant backdrops that would frame the beach and sea, and in the midst of Prohibition, screen the crowd from the outside world at the same time. It was a home away from home.

Archive photos show poolside fashion shows directed by Elizabeth Arden and Winston Churchill painting in his cabana. There were kayaks in the swimming pool, black tie boxing dinners and lavish themed galas, one time with elephants, another with 300 tables made of ice. It was a place of myth, legend and endless laughter. The names that rolled up were pioneers of the good life: Noel Coward, Douglas Fairbanks Jr. and Elizabeth Taylor, the Duke and Duchess of Windsor, Frank Sinatra, Tennessee Williams, Joan Crawford, Liberace.

The Surf Club today might have a storied past, a glittering list of names attached to it and a bigger scale and scope than before, but the powerful sense of possibility and timeless values for which it has always been cherished remain as strong as ever in its heart.
